

LIFT OFF

There's a new song-writing team around at the moment: two very talented people by the name of Harris. One you will have heard of—Rolf, of 'diggeridoo' fame (remember LOOK-IN issue 17?)—but the other, Bindi Harris, may be less familiar.

In fact, Bindi is Rolf's eight-year-old daughter. When the family were on holiday in Kenya last year, staying with Roger Whittaker's mum and dad, Rolf and Bindi used to make up songs as they travelled around the game reserves.

Rolf noticed that several of Bindi's songs seemed to stick in everybody's mind. On his return to England he decided to record some of them, working with producer George Martin, who did such great work with the Beatles.

Rolf has promised Bindi that any royalties on the songs will be saved for her, if all goes well. I hope for Bindi's sake that her dad is as lucky with her songs as he was with 'Jake the Peg' and 'Two Little Boys'—because then Bindi Harris would have one of the fullest piggy banks in England!

'Bye for now
